Earlier this month, a school principal in Bihar stole mid-day meal rice and was exposed by playing children. The children dropped the ball they were playing with into a well and found sacks of rice stashed there when they went looking for it. As per the law, every school in India receives Rs 4.48 per child for a midday meal from the government. In this way, if a school has a strength of 100, it will get Rs 450 per day.

The mid-day meal scheme was launched in the year 1995 to lure more underprivileged kids to school so that they can study without worrying about a meal. The scheme was implemented by the government to better the nutrition levels of children across the country. The provision for cooked food came into effect in 2004 at the direction of the Supreme Court.

According to a report in the Indian Express, an estimated 4.88 lakh children were left out of the midday meal scheme in Delhi "due to shortage of foodgrains", as recorded by a Union government document.
